

Oprah's non-surgical facial offered in Bolton

Recently featured on the Oprah Winfrey Show, a New York-based 'Facialist to the Stars' demonstrated her non-surgical facelift, a high tech facial utilizing micro-currents. Celebrities Susan Sarandon, Liv Tyler and Linda Evangelista to name but a few, are all devoted fans. There is no need to travel to New York, as the non-surgical facelift is available at Jade Esthetics in downtown Bolton. With 25 years as a certified esthetician, Donna Pace administers a facial treatment that has become her signature.

"I have been providing the service to clients for the past year, and the results are stunning." Pace's clients leave enraptured upon discovering their jaw lines, cheekbones and upper eyelids without resorting to surgery. Normally, micro-current treatments use electrical stimulation to tighten and firm muscles and Pace has developed the technique further.

She explains: "After exhaustive research, extensive training and incorporation of customized modifications, the results have exceeded my greatest expectations."

Pace's research led her to New York to experience first hand the treatment featured on Oprah, returning home with great confidence about the scope and expertise she is able to provide to her clients here at her Caledon spa.

Originally developed more than 20 years ago, micro-current therapy is used to treat facial weakness in Bell's palsy and stroke patients. Tiny micro-currents (literally measured in only millionths of an amp) work in harmony with the natural electrical currents found in the body, giving firmer facial tone, lifting the brow, redefining the contours of the face and relaxing over-contracted muscles, thus reducing expression lines. It also stimulates the lymphatic system, providing less puffiness, especially in the eye area and a complexion that veritably glows. There is also an increased rate in the production of collagen, as well as enhanced tissue repair. This treatment also works amazingly well on skin that has been affected by acne without the side effects other acne treatments may possess.

Although the treatment is intensive, it is non-invasive, safe and painless, with no known side effects or downtime. Depending upon your age and the condition of your skin, a series of treatments are recommended, followed by monthly maintenance to achieve lasting results.

Pace emphasizes, "The success of micro-current application is greatly influenced by the technique and knowledge of the esthetician, as the proper placement of the electrodes is crucial."

She also notes that "not all micro-current machines are created equally."
